

5 Design Secrets That Help Homes Sell Faster

A quick guide for homeowners and realtors by Magari & Co.

When buyers walk into a home, they make emotional decisions in seconds. The right design and staging can make a property feel brighter, larger, and more desirable—often helping it sell faster and for a better price.

Here are five simple but powerful design secrets professional stagers use to help homes stand out in the market.

1. Start With a Neutral Foundation

Neutral spaces photograph better, feel larger, and allow buyers to imagine their own life in the home.

Focus on soft whites, warm neutrals, and natural textures. Avoid bold paint colors that may distract or limit the buyer's imagination.

2. Light is Everything

Lighting is one of the most powerful tools in design.

Open curtains, add mirrors to reflect natural light, and layer lighting using floor lamps, table lamps, and overhead lights to create a warm and welcoming atmosphere.

3. Create Lifestyle Moments

Instead of simply placing furniture, create moments that tell a story.

A breakfast tray on the island, a cozy throw on the sofa, or a styled nightstand helps buyers imagine themselves living in the space.

4. Declutter and Simplify

Less truly is more when preparing a home for sale.

Remove excess furniture and personal items. Clean surfaces and simplified styling help rooms appear larger and more inviting.

5. Focus on the First Impression

The entryway and living room set the tone for the entire showing.

Fresh flowers, a styled console table, or a simple rug can dramatically elevate the first impression buyers experience when they walk in.

Great design doesn't have to be complicated. Small changes can dramatically transform how a home feels—and how quickly it sells.

If you're preparing a property for the market, professional staging can make all the difference.
